2 RULING (4)
3

4 1. This is an application by the First and Fifth Defendants/Plaintiffs to Counterclaim, (who I 5 shall refer to together as appropriate as either “the Applicants” or “the Gilbertson 6 Parties”), by summons dated 27th April 2011 for orders that the Plaintiff’s writ and 7 statement of claim and the defences to the counterclaim be struck out pursuant to GCR 8 O.24, r.20 and/or the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. I shall refer to the 9 Plaintiff/Defendants to the counterclaim together as appropriate as either “the 10 Respondents” or “the Renova Parties”. The Applicants’ summons also seeks the costs of 11 the action and the counterclaim against the Respondents on the indemnity basis and such 12 other relief as the Court may think fit in respect of the Applicants’ application, which is 13 based on alleged failures by the Respondents to comply with their discovery obligations.

15 2. During the course of these proceedings the Court has made several orders in relation to 16 discovery as follows:

17 1) On 20 July 2010 the Court gave directions (“the 20 July Order”) inter alia as 18 follows:

20 1) The parties shall exchange Lists of Documents no later than 12pm on 24 to a confidentiality regime) no later than 4pm on 24 September 2010.

9 4. The partner in Maples and Calder with conduct of this case on behalf of 10 the Plaintiff/Defendants to the Counterclaim shall serve at the time of 4 Defendants/Plaintiffs to the Counterclaim dated 5 November 2010 be 5 paid by the Plaintiff/Defendants to the Counterclaim, such costs to be 6 taxed if not agreed.

7 That order included a Penal Notice.

9 3.) On 7 April 2011 the Court ordered (“the 7 April Order”) that the individual 10 Renova Parties, Mr. Viktor Vekselberg, and Mr. Vladimir Kuznetsov, should 11 comply with the precise terms of the 30 November Order (i.e. to verify by 12 affidavit sworn personally their respective Further and Better Lists of Documents 13 no later than 21 April 2011).

15 3. The Applicants contend that the Renova Parties have failed to comply with their 16 discovery obligations generally, including the terms of the 30 November Order, and that 17 as a result there is a substantial risk that a fair trial of the original action and of the 18 counterclaim is not possible. They submit that accordingly the original action and the 19 Defences to the Counterclaim should be struck out pursuant to GCR O.24, r.20 and/or 20 pursuant to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

1 Background

2 4. The background to the Renova Parties' claims against the Gilbertson Parties was set out in 3 some detail in my initial Ruling dated 14 April 2009 and summarized again, more briefly, 4 in my Ruling (3) dated 5 May 2010. Although I do not consider it necessary for present 5 purposes to reiterate all of the details as set out in those Rulings, nonetheless in order to 6 address the questions concerning discovery which are the subject of this application I 7 should, at the risk of repeating what I have already said before in these proceedings, 8 explain at least the general background and the principal issues in the case. The original 9 action is a derivative action, indeed a "multiple derivative action", brought by Renova 10 Resources Private Equity Limited, ("the Plaintiff"), one of the corporate Renova Parties.

11 12 5 The Plaintiff is a member of the Renova Group of companies, which is ultimately 13 controlled by one of the individual Renova Parties, Mr. Vekselberg. The Renova Group is 14 one of Russia's leading private conglomerates. It comprises a considerable number of 15 companies with significant investments in various sectors, including inter alia oil, metals, 16 mining and construction in various countries. Although Mr. Vekselberg and others are 17 based in Moscow, the Group has significant offices in Zurich, Switzerland. The 18 Investment Director of the management company of the Renova Group is one of the 19 individual Renova Parties, Mr. Kuznetsov, who is based in Zurich. The Chief Legal 20 Officer of the Renova Group management company is Mr. Igor Cheremikin, who is based 21 in Moscow, and the Deputy Chief Legal Officer is Mr. David Kalberer, a Swiss lawyer, 22 who is also based in Zurich. I should also mention for convenience at this point, 23 Mr. Sergey Grosset who is the head of the IT Department of the Renova Group

1 Management company, based in Moscow. I shall, in the course of this ruling, refer to other 2 individuals employed by or connected with the Renova Group but these are the principal 3 individuals for these purposes.
4

5 6 The Plaintiff's claims in the original action are directed at the Gilbertson Parties, namely 6 Mr. Brian Gilbertson and a British Virgin Islands company, Autumn Holdings Asset Inc.
7 ("Autumn") which is ultimately a Gilbertson family entity. The Cayman Islands 8 company, Pallinghurst (Cayman) General Partner LP (GP) ("the Company"), on whose 9 behalf the original action purports to be brought by the Plaintiff is owned as to 50% 10 indirectly by the Plaintiff and as to 50% indirectly by Mr. Gilbertson. The two directors 11 of the Company are Mr. Gilbertson and Mr. Kuznetsov. The Company is the general 12 partner of a Cayman Islands exempted limited partnership which is in turn the general 13 partner of a Cayman Islands investment fund, known as "The Master Fund". A diagram 14 of this structure, which is known as the Pallinghurst Structure, is at page 24 of my Ruling 15 dated 14 April 2009.

17 7 The Pallinghurst Structure was established to reflect what was essentially a joint venture 18 between Mr. Vekselberg and Mr. Gilbertson as set out in an agreement between another 19 Renova Group company, the parent of the Plaintiff, and Mr. Gilbertson comprised in a 20 letter dated 24th November 2005, known as "the Letter Agreement". For some time prior 21 to and after that date Mr. Gilbertson was himself employed by a Renova Group company 22 in Russia although he subsequently ceased to be and is no longer so employed. The 23 expressed purpose of the Pallinghurst Structure was to explore, acquire and develop

1 opportunities in the metal and mining industry to be held as investments by the Master 2 Fund.

3
4 8 In summary, the essence of the Plaintiff's claim in the original action is that Mr.
5 Gilbertson acted in breach of his fiduciary duties as a director of the Company, by 6 diverting away from the Company a very valuable opportunity to acquire from Unilever 7 plc the right to exploit commercially the well-known Fabergé brand ("the Rights"). This 8 opportunity to acquire and exploit the Rights became known as "Project Egg". There are 9 also claims against the corporate Gilbertson Party, Autumn, of knowing participation in 10 this wrongful diversion of assets by Mr. Gilbertson.

12 9 The acquisition of the Rights from Unilever was originally proposed by Mr. Gilbertson as 13 an interesting investment and although it was not an investment of the kind contemplated 14 for the Pallinghurst Structure and was never approved as such by its Investment 15 Committee, at least until near to the time of the actual purchase of the Rights, the 16 affidavit evidence filed to date by the Gilbertson Parties is that the parties were 17 proceeding on the basis that the Rights would be acquired by the Master Fund, which 18 was, of course, an integral part of the Pallinghurst Structure and ultimately therefore to 19 the benefit of the Company. The Plaintiff's case is that Mr. Gilbertson wrongfully 20 diverted the Rights away from the Company for his own benefit and not that of the 21 Company by procuring the purchase of the Rights with the financial assistance of other 22 investors, rather than Mr. Vekselberg and the Renova Group, and by procuring the issue 23 of shares in a subsidiary of the Master Fund called Project Egg Limited (which was the 1 vehicle used to acquire the Rights) to those other investors, thereby diluting the intended 2 interest of the Company in the Rights through the Master Fund from 100% to less than 3 1%. The Plaintiff contends that it had been agreed from the start that the Renova Group 4 (subsequently agreed to be through a Group company, Renova Holdings) would provide 5 or procure the funding for the acquisition of the Rights on terms which were reasonable 6 and in the best interests of the Company, even if in the event not ultimately acceptable to 7 Mr. Gilbertson personally. One of the three replacement shareholder investors procured 8 by Mr. Gilbertson was Autumn. The Plaintiff contends that Mr. Gilbertson is liable to 9 account to the Company and/or the Master Fund for profits received by him and/or by 10 Autumn, those profits reflecting the very substantial increase in the value of the Rights.

11 It pleads also that Autumn is liable for knowing receipt.

13 10 By their defence and counterclaim the Gilbertson Parties contend that Mr Gilbertson was 14 free to acquire the Rights for his own benefit because, he contends, the Renova Parties 15 were themselves in breach of the joint venture agreement by insisting at the last minute, 16 as a pre-condition of providing the financing for their purchase of the Rights, that the 17 Rights should be held by another Renova Group company outside the Pallinghurst 18 Structure, "Lamesa". Mr. Gilbertson contends that Mr. Vekselberg's last minute 19 insistence that the Rights should be owned by a company outside the Pallinghurst 20 Structure and that he would not finance the purchase of the Rights unless it was, was in 21 breach of what had been agreed and of the terms of the joint venture between him and 22 Mr. Vekselberg, as evidenced by the Letter Agreement and the parties subsequent 23 dealings on that basis.

11 There then followed, between about 20 December 2006 and early January 2007, negotiations between the parties concerning a possible "Implementation Agreement" whereby the legal ownership and the economic benefits of the Rights would be split but the negotiations were unsuccessful and Mr. Gilbertson proceeded to acquire the Rights with funding from alternative sources (including Autumn) as explained above, thereby excluding any benefit to the Company (and hence Mr. Vekselberg and the Renova Group).

12 The Gilbertson Parties' counterclaim expressly only arises if the Plaintiff is successful in the original action; if the Plaintiff is not successful the counterclaim does not need to be pursued. In brief, the counterclaim is to the effect that if the Plaintiff is successful in its claim and Mr. Gilbertson is liable for breach of fiduciary duty in acting as he did, Mr. Gilbertson's conduct in acting as he did and, on this assumption, his resulting alleged liability was wholly a result of the Renova Party's own wrongful conduct in seeking to unilaterally change the terms of the agreement between the parties and the basis upon which the Rights were to be acquired. The Gilbertson Parties contend that the individual Renova Parties, Mr. Vekselberg and Mr Kuznetsov procured this wrongful conduct by the Renova Parties and so are liable to indemnify Mr. Gilbertson for any loss he suffers if the Plaintiff's claim is successful.

1 13 The parties disagree over the extent to which some of this background is relevant to the 2 issues in dispute as pleaded. The Renova Parties focus for the most part on the period 3 from about 15 December 2006 to early January 2007. The Gilbertson Parties, however, 4 focus also on the earlier period when the Letter Agreement was being negotiated and also 5 on the later period up to the end of May 2007, in particular. Leading counsel for the 6 Gilbertson Parties, at paragraph 25 of his Skeleton Argument, summarized what they 7 contend are the main issues which will arise for determination by the Court at trial, 8 amongst others, as follows:

10 25.1 The meaning and effect of various provisions (including, but not limited to, 11 Clauses 2.1, 2.4, 2.5 and 8.2) of the Letter Agreement and the inter- 12 Relationship between the scope of Mr Gilbertson's fiduciary duty to the 13 Company (on the one hand) and the Letter Agreement (on the other hand) –
14 this issue will inevitably require consideration by the Court of the full factual
15 background to the conclusion of the Letter Agreement and the precise nature 16 and intended scope of the joint venture between Mr Gilbertson and 17 Mr. Vekselberg (and the entities associated with them); 18

19 25.2 Whether Project Egg [the name given to the proposed acquisition of the Rights]
20 was ever approved by both Mr Gilbertson and Mr Kuznetsov (and hence, by Mr 21 Vekselberg, on whose instructions it is common ground that Mr Kuznetsov 22 acted) to be an Investment Project of the Pallinghurst Structure; 23

24 25.3 Why the Renova Parties decided not to finance the purchase of the Rights unless 25 ownership of the Rights was held by Lamesa, [the Panamanian Renova Group 26 Panamanian Company, Lamesa] outside the Pallinghurst Structure; 27

28 25.4 Whether the ownership of the Rights was ever intended to be held outside the 29 Pallinghurst Structure;
30

31 25.5 Whether it was unreasonable of Mr Gilbertson and/or otherwise a breach of his 32 fiduciary duty to the Company not to have consented to the terms of the draft 33 Implementation Agreement as demanded by the Renova Parties;

25.6 Whether the Renova Parties were entitled to insist on the ownership of the Rights being transferred to Lamesa, outside the Pallinghurst Structure;

25.7 Whether Mr Vekselberg and/or Mr Kuznetsov induced or procured Renova Holding to breach the Letter Agreement by refusing to provide any funding unless ownership of the Rights was held by Lamesa outside the Pallinghurst Structure.

258 Whether Messrs Vekselberg and Kuznetsov conspired amongst themselves and/or with Renova Holding and/or the Plaintiff to damage and/or to commit unlawful acts against, the Master Fund and/or Mr Gilbertson;

25.9 Whether Mr Kuznetsov acted in breach of his fiduciary duties to the Company, and, if so, whether he is liable in equity to provide a full indemnity or a contribution to Mr Gilbertson in the event of the latter being held liable for breach of fiduciary duty to the Company as the Renova Group claims.

14 Leading counsel for the Renova Parties disputed that all of these issues arise from the pleadings for determination or at least that they are crucial issues clearly requiring determination by the Court at a trial. For example, he argued that the Letter Agreement, being a written document, speaks for itself and that any documentary material relating to the internal views of the parties concerning its purpose or meaning is not relevant or even admissible. He submitted that several of the issues which Leading counsel for the Gilbertson Parties had raised in paragraph 25 of his skeleton argument as summarised above and as further expanded on in paragraph 27 of his skeleton argument, were either not pleaded or not matters on which the internal views and any internal communications of the parties were relevant.

1 The Renova Parties' Discovery

2 15 The basic complaint made by the Gilbertson Parties about the Renova Parties discovery 3 largely concerns the lack of discovery of any relevant internal communications, 4 particularly emails, or other electronic data, between the individuals involved within the 5 Renova Group, particularly Mr. Vekselberg, Mr Kuznetsov and Mr Kalberer, but also of 6 any notes of telephone conversations, meetings and other discussion papers, memoranda 7 or other relevant internal documentation. The Gilbertson Parties contrast the significant 8 number of internal e-mails in particular exchanged as between themselves and also 9 between them and those associated with them, with the handful of internal e-mails 10 discovered by the Renova Parties, most, if not all of which, are anyway simply 11 forwarding internally e-mails which had been sent or received externally.

13 16 The undisputed evidence is that in January 2007 the Renova Parties sought advice
14 concerning the prospects of the claim, which they now make against the Gilbertson 15 Parties in the original action, from their London solicitors, Jones Day. In that connection 16 Mr. Cheremikin and Mr. Kalberer themselves identified and produced to Jones Day what 17 they considered to be the most significant documents to enable Jones Day to advise them 18 on the Renova Group's prospects. Their evidence is, and this was not disputed, that in no 19 sense was this intended to be a full scale discovery exercise on behalf of the Renova 20 Group but simply identification and production of what Mr. Cheremikin and Mr.
21 Kalberer believed to be the most important documents. The instructions given to and the 22 advice received from Jones Day are privileged. However, it was at or about this time that 23 Jones Day instructed Maples and Calder to act as the Renova Group's attorneys in the 1 Cayman Islands. Although the advice given is again privileged, the evidence is that at or 2 about this time Maples and Calder and/or Jones Day advised the Renova Group of the 3 need to preserve all documents which might be relevant to the issues in the proposed 4 proceedings.

6 17 These proceedings (the original action) were commenced by the Plaintiff against, inter
7 alia the Gilbertson Parties, on 20th May 2008. After various interlocutory hearings 8 (including those resulting in the Rulings dated 14th April 2009, 28th April and 5th May 9 2010) and the filing by the Gilbertson Parties of their Defence and Counterclaim, the 10 Court made, by consent, the 20 July Order, which was in the usual terms, with regard to 11 discovery. The Renova Parties duly produced a List of Documents dated 1st October 12 2010 which indicated in general terms that they no longer had in their possession, 13 custody or power documents which had been destroyed and could not now be recovered.
14 However, 10 days later, on 12th October 2010, Maples and Calder wrote to the attorneys 15 for the Gilbertson Parties, Appleby, stating that, as a result of a server crash which had 16 occurred at the Renova Group's premises in Zurich in January 2008, the Renova Parties 17 were not in a position to identify, list or produce copies of any relevant documents that 18 had been stored electronically on the Zurich computers and that such documents were not 19 capable of being recovered. This significant problem had not been intimated to the 20 Gilbertson Parties or their advisors previously.

22 18 Over the next few months it became apparent that the Renova Group's IT staff had at 23 various times following the Zurich server crash deleted or destroyed all available sources

1 or copies of electronic data which had been on the Zurich server prior to the crash and,
2 that in most instances, such deletion and destruction had taken place after the 3 commencement of these proceedings. I will elaborate on that later in this Ruling.

4
5 19 As a result of their increasing concerns about the steps taken by the Renova Group and 6 having obtained advice from experienced, independent IT experts, the Gilbertson Parties 7 applied to the Court, inter alia, for Further and Better Lists of Documents to be produced 8 by each of the Renova Parties verified by affidavit by each of them, and for orders for 9 preservation of all potential relevant electronic data and all potentially relevant computer 10 hardware on which such data may be stored held by the Renova Parties and each of them.
11 They applied also for orders relating to the steps taken by Maples and Calder in relation 12 to the Renova Parties' discovery.

14 20 Following a contested hearing on 25th November 2010, during the course of which 15 counsel for the Renova Parties indicated that they were proposing imminently to instruct 16 independent IT experts themselves, I issued an Ex Tempore Ruling on 30 November 17 2010 which I think I should quote in full:

19 The Court has already ruled that this matter should be tried with full discovery, 20 examination and cross-examination of witnesses in the usual way and the trial
21 is now listed for 8th June 2011 [since postponed] for a period of 6 weeks.

23 In order for justice to be done and seen to be done by a fair trial of the issues it 24 is essential that all of the parties to the claim and the counterclaim list and 25 produce for inspection by way of discovery all documentation that is in any 26 way relevant to the issues in dispute, which are or have been in the possession, 27 custody or power of the party concerned. Documentation includes email 28 communications, notes and memos of meetings and discussions, including 29 telephone conversations, etc., whether in hard copy or electronic form on any 30 computer server, laptop, or handheld device of any kind wherever they may be.

1 This is so whether or not such documentation is considered by the party to be 2 important or to be helpful or unhelpful to his case. This is the law in this 3 jurisdiction, as it is in England, and it is considered by the Court to be a 4 serious breach by any party, with serious consequences, not to give full and 5 proper discovery. In the case of a corporate party this will include giving 6 discovery of any relevant documentation which is or has been in the possession 7 or custody of any director, officer or employee such as, in the present case, Mr.

9
10 It is also the professional duty of a party's lawyer in this country, as an officer 11 of the Court, to ensure as far as reasonable that the party whom he or she 12 represents clearly understands and acts upon the requirement to give full and 13 proper discovery. That professional duty may require a party's lawyer to go 14 somewhat further in this respect in the case of a foreign party, who may not 15 understand and/or appreciate the rationale for and the nature and extent of the 16 obligation to give full and proper discovery of all documentation relating to 17 the issues in dispute and to whom the obligation to list and produce documents 18 which seem to go against his own case or which seem to help the case of the 19 opposing party may be unattractive and seem contrary to his own interests.

21 This is not intended to be a comprehensive and full Ruling but having reviewed 22 the affidavit evidence and considered the skeleton arguments, the law and 23 authorities cited and heard the oral submissions of counsel, it seems to me that 24 there is a probable lack of discovery by the plaintiff and each of the 4 25 defendants to the counterclaim (together "the Renova Parties"). There are 26 issues in this case in respect of which in all probability there would have been 27 a significant number of internal communications and discussions as between 28 the Renova Parties and each of them (and in the case of the corporate Renova 29 Parties their beneficial owners, directors, officers, and employees) and as 30 between each of them and other members of the Renova Group. The issues in 31 dispute in the claim and the counterclaim are well known to all the parties but 32 in the absence of full and specific explanation by affidavit by each of the 33 Renova Parties it is not easy to accept that there is not a substantial amount, 34 and never has been, of internal documentation relating in any way to these 35 issues. For example, it seems most probable that there would have been 36 considerable internal communication and discussion concerning the significant 37 decision not to finance the proposed purchase of the Faberge Rights from 38 Unilever as originally intended unless ownership of those Rights was to be 39 held by a different Renova Group company, Lamesa Arts Inc, outside the 40 Pallinghurst structure. It is similarly unconvincing that there were not a 41 number of internal communications within the Renova Group concerning 42 whether the proposed acquisition of the Faberge Rights was or was not or 43 should or should not be within the Pallinghurst structure and subsequently 44 concerning the decision to take the approach set out in the letter dated 25th 45 May 2007 that it had never been intended that the Faberge Rights should be

1 held within the Pallinghurst structure. These are just examples of issues 2 concerning which internal documentation seems most likely to have been 3 created, of which there is a surprising lack listed, but which still may exist or 4 at least must have existed and, which if appropriate searches and steps had 5 been taken would have been discovered and even now may possibly be 6 ascertained and listed by further and better lists.

8 The Renova Parties claim that the lack of documentation currently listed is 9 mainly due to a computer server crash in the Renova Group's office in Zurich 10 in January 2008. This is explained in an affidavit of Mr. Igor Cheremikin, 11 Chief Legal Officer of the Renova Group's management company, sworn in 12 Moscow on 18th November 2010. Mr. Cheremikin also purports to explain, on 13 a hearsay basis of course, the steps taken by the Renova Group IT personnel 14 following the crash, as a result of which, he says, no further documentation is 15 available from that server or from back-up tapes kept both on and off-site. I 16 agree with counsel for the 2 defendants and plaintiffs in the counterclaim 17 (together "the Gilbertson Parties") that these explanations are insufficiently 18 detailed and specific, leave significant gaps and unanswered questions and are 19 not sufficient to resolve the concerns which arise about the apparent lack of 20 discovery. Nor does the affidavit satisfy the concerns to which it gives rise also 21 in relation to what was done by the Renova Group IT personnel following the 22 server crash and why specialist forensic data recovery experts were not used 23 and data destroyed. There is cause for concern also about the apparent failure 24 of the Renova Parties to actively pursue possible alternative sources of 25 relevant data in Switzerland, Russia, the Bahamas, the USA and Cyprus. It 26 seems possible that relevant data may still possibly be in the custody, 27 possession or power of the Renova Parties or one or more of them accessible 28 from computers, servers or electronic handheld devices and the like in any of 29 those places, particularly Russia.

31 These concerns and possibilities are largely identified and discussed in a 32 report by Mr. Steve Buddell dated 23rd November 2010 which is exhibited to 33 the 5th affidavit of Mr. Jeremy Kosky of Clifford Chance, the London solicitors 34 for the Gilbertson Parties. Mr Buddell is an independent computer expert 35 specializing inter alia in forensic recovery and re-constitution of electronic 36 data and resolving problems of the sort identified by Mr. Cheremikin as arising 37 from the computer crash in Zurich. I found Mr. Buddell's report very helpful in 38 setting out various ways in which it may still be possible to recover relevant 39 data, particularly emails, apparently lost as a result of the crash and as a 40 result of the somewhat surprising steps taken by the Renova IT personnel 41 thereafter, including their apparently deciding themselves, without any 42 guidance, which data was not "important" and could therefore be deleted.
43 In the circumstances it is, in my opinion, now incumbent on each of the Renova 44 Parties, having regard to my comments and the analysis and suggestions in 45 Mr. Buddell's report, and I order each of them, to serve a further and better

1 list of documents, verified in each case by affidavit by the relevant party 2 personally and in the case of a corporate party by a director who is willing and 3 available to give evidence at the trial. In order that the Renova Parties should 4 each have sufficient time to obtain and utilise the services of an independent 5 forensic computer expert to assist them to comply with their discovery 6 obligations and with the Court's order, should they be advised to do so, I will 7 allow them until 11th January 2011 to serve such further and better lists and 8 verifying affidavits.
9

10 It goes without saying that each of the Renova Parties, including by their 11 respective beneficial owners, officers, employees, agents and other members of 12 the Renova Group, must take all steps necessary to preserve all computers, 13 servers, back-up tapes, handheld electronic devices or other means of 14 transmitting or receiving data and all or any data which they are advised may 15 be relevant which is held or stored on or by any such or similar means in any 16 jurisdiction whatsoever and I also so order to that effect with a penal notice to

19 I direct too that each of the Renova Parties shall produce a detailed log (with 20 technical assistance if necessary, such technical assistance to be specifically 21 identified) identifying precisely the nature, the medium (whether encrypted or 22 unencrypted) and the exact location of all such means of transmitting, 23 receiving or storing data and the data which is or was thereon which they have 24 been advised may be relevant, as referred to above, such log to be exhibited in 25 each case to the affidavit sworn in verification of that Renova Party's further 26 and better list.
27

28 In the particular circumstances I do consider it appropriate that the partner of 29 Maples and Calder responsible for the conduct of this case on behalf of the 30 Renova Parties shall, at the same times as service of further and better lists by 31 each of the Renova Parties as I have ordered, serve an affidavit explaining the 32 precise steps taken by each of the Renova Parties in compliance with this order 33 and when, where and how such steps were taken. I therefore make an order to 34 that effect.
35

36 In light of my rulings above, the costs incurred by the Gilbertson Parties in 37 respect of and occasioned by their summons dated 5th November 2010 shall be 38 paid by the Renova Parties in any event, such costs to be taxed if not agreed.
39

40 In light of this, and the following certain further negotiations between the parties, I made 41 the 30 November Order to which I have already referred at paragraph 2(2) above.
42

1 21 Following the 30 November Order, Further and Better Lists, verified by affidavit, were 2 produced by the corporate Renova Parties but separate Lists verified by affidavit were not 3 produced by the individual Renova Parties, Mr. Vekselberg and Mr. Kuznetsov. Other 4 affidavits were also filed on behalf of the Renova Parties in light of the terms of the 5 order. In light of the failure of the individual Renova Parties to comply strictly with the 6 30 November Order there followed a further contested hearing following of which I made 7 the 7 April Order with which Mr. Vekselberg and Mr. Kuznetsov then complied by 8 submitting verifying affidavits.

9
10 22 I should also note that according to the affidavit evidence of the Renova Parties, 11 subsequent to the advice given to the Renova Group concerning the need to preserve 12 relevant documents which they received in January 2007, to which I have already 13 referred above, the Renova Parties did not receive any further advice from or have any 14 discussions with either Jones Day or Maples and Calder concerning discovery until 15 October 2009, after the filing of the Renova Parties' Reply and Defence to the Gilbertson 16 Parties' Defence and Counterclaim. The advice which they were given then is also, of 17 course, privileged but the concerns which were subsequently brought to my attention 18 concerning the steps taken or not taken by the Renova Parties' attorneys in relation to 19 discovery are clearly reflected in my Ex Tempore Ruling dated 30 November 2010 20 quoted above.

2 The steps taken by or on behalf of the Renova Parties

3
4 23 I do not propose to rehearse in great detail the steps taken by the Renova Group IT 5 Department following the Zurich server crash in January 2008. They are the subject of 6 detailed discussion, analysis and comment by the parties' respective IT experts, much of 7 which is of a technical IT nature. The Gilbertson Parties' criticisms thereof and the 8 Renova Parties explanations are exhaustively set out in the various affidavits, as well as 9 the experts' reports, which were filed and relied upon in the course of the 4 day hearing 10 before me. They are also canvassed at length and in detail in the parties' respective 11 skeleton arguments. In summary, however, the Gilbertson Parties' complaints are largely 12 based upon the destruction of all sources of data following the crash of the Renova 13 Group's server in Zurich, which was the principal source of historic e-mails, in particular 14 the following:

16 (a) The Zurich server crash: This occurred on 24th January 2008, some four months prior 17 to the commencement of these proceedings. There is no evidence, and it was not 18 suggested, that this crash was anything other than accidental but it is the steps taken by 19 the Renova Group following the crash that are heavily criticised by the Gilbertson 20 Parties as being inconsistent with the Renova Parties' discovery obligations and their 21 obligation to preserve documents and the sources of documents in particular.

22
23 Following the crash it is said that the Renova IT staff were under pressure to restore e-24 mail services as soon as possible and accordingly the data on the original crashed 25 server's e-mail database was deleted in order to enable this. The Renova Parties' 26 evidence is that this was considered an appropriate solution at the time as the Renova 27 IT staff are said to have believed that they would be able to restore the deleted data

1 from other sources, in particular certain back-up tapes (referred to at (b) and (c) below).
2 Furthermore, before deleting the original e-mail database, the IT staff copied the 3 content of the crashed sever onto a decommissioned server in Moscow (referred to at 4 (d) below). The Renova Group then went on to re-use the failed Zurich server after the 5 crash and deleted the original database to enable such re-use.
6

7 Later, from December 2009 onwards, the Renova Group used the failed Zurich server 8 for mail forwarding purposes. This required the IT department to reconfigure the 9 hardware and to install new system files on the crashed server, the effect of which was 10 to further reduce significantly the possibility of repairing and recovering any original 11 deleted data. Although the parties' IT experts agree that it may have been possible to 12 recover e-mail messages originally, the consequence of the Renova Group's continued 13 use of the failed Zurich server during 2008 and 2009 meant that any potentially 14 recoverable e-mail data would have been over-written and so rendered irrecoverable.
15 The Renova Group did not consult any IT experts until shortly before my Ex Tempore 16 Ruling in November 2010, almost 3 years after the server crash.
17

18 (b) The back-up tapes: The data stored on the Zurich server was as a matter of course 19 stored and duplicated in encrypted back-up tapes daily, weekly, monthly and 20 annually. Access to the data stored on the encrypted back-up tapes required the use 21 of three pass-worded "keys". Sometime after August 2008, that is after the 22 commencement of these proceedings the Renova Group, through their IT department 23 took the decision to destroy the encrypted back-up tapes because one of the holders of 24 the pass-worded keys (Mr. Cheremikin) had lost his password and, it is said by the 25 Renova Parties, access to the data on the back-up tapes was therefore no longer 26 possible. It was apparently thought by the Renova Group IT department that 27 important data held on the Zurich crashed server would have been saved to network 28 desktop folders which would not have been adversely affected by the server crash.
29

1 (c) Unencrypted copy of Zurich server database: This separate unencrypted copy of the 2 database, which was additional to the encrypted back-up tapes mentioned above and 3 additional to the decommissioned Moscow server copy, was made after the server 4 crash in order to enable the defragmentation of the database. However, it appears, for 5 unexplained reasons, that the defragmentation process was not successful and the 6 Renova Parties' evidence is that once again the Renova Group IT personnel went on 7 to destroy the unencrypted copy of the original Zurich server data as well.

8 9 (d) The decommissioned Moscow server: As already mentioned the database of the 10 failed Zurich server was copied by the Renova Group IT department onto a 11 decommissioned server in Moscow. However, the Renova Group subsequently 12 installed other software on that server to enable it to be used for testing purposes as a 13 result of which the copy of the failed Zurich server database was over-written and the 14 possibly of successfully recovering any e-mails over the period 2005 to 2007 from the 15 Moscow server was consequently precluded. The evidence of the Renova Parties' 16 own expert is that this overwriting occurred on 4th December 2009, 10th February 17 2010 and 26 November 2010.

19 (e) Deletion of the logical drive: The Renova Parties' evidence is that is that the logical 20 drive of the crashed Zurich server was deleted by the Renova Group IT personnel on 21 or after 1st December 2010, that is after paragraph 3 of the 30 November Order was 22 made. This deletion had the effect of further frustrating any attempt to recover the 23 original deleted data from the crashed Zurich server. On later re-examination by the 24 Renova Parties own IT experts, a number of folders (but not files) with names 25 apparently relating to the Pallinghurst Structure were identified. It is not clear 26 whether these folders ever contained user created files. The suggestions made and 27 issues raised relating to the logical drive by the parties' respective IT experts differ 28 but it does appear that questions concerning the potential recovery of data by this 29 means are unanswered by the Renova Group IT department.

1 24 The upshot of all this is that it is accepted that the Renova IT department took a series of 2 very significant decisions in the period January 2008 to December 2010 which has 3 resulted in the effective eradication of all potential sources of any relevant electronic 4 documentation saved on the crashed Zurich server. The evidence of the Gilbertson
5 Parties' independent IT experts, which is not disputed in this respect by the Renova
6 Parties' own independent IT experts, is that it would not have been difficult or expensive 7 for the Renova Group to make different decisions at the time which would have ensured 8 that all of the potential sources of data concerned were preserved for expert forensic 9 examination, particularly given that these proceedings were clearly in contemplation at 10 the time of the Zurich computer crash and commenced shortly thereafter, and given also 11 that the Renova Group had already received legal advice prior to the server crash that 12 they should preserve all relevant documentation for purposes of these proceedings.
13 Notwithstanding that advice the Renova Group took deliberate steps, in most instances 14 after these proceedings had commenced, which destroyed any prospects of recovering for 15 discovery purposes e-mail and other electronic data from any potential sources apparently 16 without any regard for their discovery obligations and the need to preserve any 17 potentially relevant e-mails and other documents.

19 25 The Gilbertson Parties also complain about other aspects of the Renova Parties' 20 discovery. They point to the complete absence of notes, memoranda and working 21 documents. For example, they are cynical of Mr. Kalberer's evidence that it was his 22 practice to dispose on a regular basis of all his working documents, handwritten notes etc.
23 made on or in connection with draft agreements so that he is unable to now discover any

1 such material. An example of this relates to the period between late December 2006 and 2 early January 2007 when negotiations were taking place between Mr. Gilbertson on one 3 hand and Mr. Vekselberg (through Mr. Kuznetsov and Mr. Kalberer) on the other hand 4 regarding the various drafts of the proposed Implementation Agreement. Mr. Kalberer, 5 was directly involved in the drafting and revised drafting of the proposed terms.
6 However, he was on vacation in Brazil at the time and was taking instructions from Mr.
7 Kuznetsov, who was presumably in Zurich, or possibly, in Moscow, with Mr. Kalberer 8 then implementing such instructions in his drafting on his laptop. It does seem rather 9 improbable that Mr. Kalberer would not have made detailed notes of his discussions with 10 Mr. Kuznetsov and of the various proposals discussed so that he could then incorporate 11 them in the draft on his laptop. I find it somewhat surprising that Mr. Kalberer, as a 12 lawyer, would not have retained those notes (and indeed his notes relating to other 13 instructions, for example relating to the drafting of the Letter Agreement), if only for his 14 own protection. However, Mr. Kalberer's affidavit evidence is that his practice was to 15 destroy his earlier drafts and this of course occurred prior to the commencement of these 16 proceedings, although possibly in some instances after they were in contemplation.

18 26 The Gilbertson Parties also complain about Mr. Vekselberg's failure to give discovery of 19 any e-mails received on and possibly sent from e-mail addresses, other than his Renova 20 addresses, used by him. He accepts in his evidence that "people" sent him e-mails to 21 such addresses which related to his personal business, such as the acquisition of the 22 Rights. One such e-mail address is Mr. Vekselberg's TNK-BP e-mail address. The 23 probability, based on his evidence, is that Mr. Vekselberg's TNK-BP e-mail account

1 contained relevant e-mails. Mr. Vekselberg is an executive director and a member of the 2 Board of TNK-BP but he has declined to take any steps to obtain access to his personal 3 historic e-mails from his TNK-BP address over the relevant period. His reason for not 4 doing so is because there is a dispute, the subject of arbitration, between the consortium 5 of which Renova is a member on the one hand and BP on the other hand which affects 6 TNK-BP. Mr. Vekselberg considers that in the circumstances it would not be 7 “appropriate” for him to request TNK-BP’s IT department to spend company time and 8 resources in searching TNK-BP’s computer systems for his personal e-mails relating to 9 these proceedings, which have nothing to do with TNK-BP. Mr. Vekselberg says that he 10 is not in a position to make such a request in the current environment in which his 11 relationship with TNK-BP is very strained. He contends that any such documents are 12 accordingly not in his possession, custody or power. There seems to have been no 13 objection on the part of TNK-BP to Mr. Vekselberg using his e-mail account for personal 14 business purposes and, notwithstanding the ongoing arbitration, I find it hard to see why, 15 as an executive director and Board member, he should not be able to obtain access to 16 such historic personal e-mails which are unrelated to the business of TNK-TBP and 17 unrelated to the arbitration. I do not find the Renova Parties’ submissions in this regard 18 particularly compelling. In my view, the overall impression given is that Mr. Vekselberg 19 either does not understand or accept or does not wish to understand or accept the 20 requirement to use his best endeavours to obtain access to such e-mails so as to comply 21 with his discovery obligations in the present proceedings, which he has procured the 22 Plaintiff to initiate.

1 27 Mr. Vekselberg is also a non-executive director and chairman of the Board of a Jersey 2 company, known as RUSAL, which is the successor to a company known as SUAL. The 3 evidence of the Renova Parties is that Mr. Vekselberg also used his SUAL e-mail address 4 at times for personal business, including in relation to the issues in these proceedings.
5 Mr. Vekselberg's objection to disclosure of e-mails sent to and from that e-mail address 6 is based on Jersey law advice that he does not have a legal right to require RUSAL to 7 carry out a search of its IT systems for potentially relevant historic e-mails on his SUAL
8 account. He therefore says that any such e-mails too are not in his possessions, custody 9 or power. The Gilbertson Parties' position in this regard is effectively the same as it is in 10 relation to Mr. Vekselberg's TNK-BP e-mail account. They argue that there is no 11 evidence that Mr. Vekselberg was prohibited by SUAL from using his SUAL e-mail 12 address for corresponding in regard to matters unconnected with SUAL's business; they 13 contend that indeed it is to be presumed that he had SUAL's consent to use his e-mail 14 address for personal business in the way that he did. They submit that in those 15 circumstances SUAL's consent can be taken as extending to Mr. Vekselberg having 16 access to personal e-mails which he was permitted at the time to receive and/or send. In 17 this instance, Mr. Vekselberg has written to RUSAL requesting copies of his e-mails over 18 the relevant period but no response has yet been received. In the absence to-date of a 19 response from RUSAL to Mr. Vekselberg's letter, the final factual position is not known 20 but, once again, the overall impression given, in my view, is that, notwithstanding that 21 the 30 November Order expressly required Mr. Vekselberg to list in his List of 22 Documents all documents, including e-mails or other data sent to or from any e-mail 23 address used by him (my emphasis), Mr. Vekselberg has been less than enthusiastic in

1 complying with the terms of that order. I am somewhat cynical about the explanation 2 which he has given for his contention that such e-mails are not within his possession, 3 custody or power.
4

5 28 The Gilbertson Parties also contend that potentially relevant e-mails are likely to be held 6 on e-mail accounts of Mr. Vekselberg's daughter, Irina Vekselberg ("Irina"). Mr.
7 Gilbertson and his associates had e-mail exchanges with Irina at relevant times in relation 8 to the matters which are the subject of these proceedings. Irina was apparently employed 9 by a company within the Renova Group and took a personal interest in the acquisition of 10 the Rights. The Renova Parties have not objected to disclosure of e-mails on Irina's 11 Renova Group email address but they do object to the discovery of e-mails or other 12 documents send to or from her personal e-mail address on the ground that any such e-13 mails are not in their possession, custody or power. This is based on Russian law 14 evidence that the Renova Parties do not have a legal right under Russian Law to compel 15 Irina to produce any such documents on her personal e-mail account for the purposes of 16 discovery in these proceedings. However, Russian law evidence obtained by the 17 Gilbertson Parties indicates on the contrary that there are two grounds upon which the 18 Renova Parties could lawfully require Irina to disclose e-mails sent to her personal e-mail 19 address which relate to the issues in dispute. However, to my mind, the question of 20 discovery of potentially relevant e-mails on Irina's personal e-mail account is very 21 peripheral to the main issues in this dispute. Its resolution would require determination 22 of which Russian legal advice the Court should prefer in the absence of cross-23 examination and I do not consider a trial on that issue to be appropriate as part of what is,

1 after all, an interlocutory application, which even without that issue, in my opinion, took 2 inappropriately long. I therefore do not consider it necessary for the determination of this 3 application to express any opinion on the position with regard to e-mails sent to or from 4 Irina's personal e-mail address.

6 The Parties' Contentions

7 29 The Gilbertson Parties contend that it is highly probable that there were internal e-mail
8 exchanges between the Renova Parties and between them and other Renova Group 9 employees concerning the issues in the case. They point out that the Renova Group is a 10 large international conglomerate with significant business interests in various countries 11 which advertises its "global corporate governance standards and advanced global 12 production and management technologies and its standardization and documentation of 13 key management proposals.... aimed to improve management decision making quality." 14 Furthermore, the Gilbertson Parties point out that the Renova Parties' own evidence 15 shows that they did in fact use e-mail to communicate with the Gilbertson Parties and to 16 copy such communications internally to each other. They contend that in the 17 circumstances it is most likely that there were internal e-mail communications between 18 the Renova Parties themselves and between them and other individuals within the Renova 19 Group, such as Mr. Cheremikin and Mr. Kalberer, who were located in different 20 countries and different time zones. They also contend that the probabilities are that any 21 such internal e-mail communications were saved on the e-mail database of the Zurich
22 server which crashed in January 2008. The Zurich offices were the principal Renova 23 Group headquarters outside Russia and the evidence of Mr. Vekselberg, Mr. Kuznetsov,

1 and Mr. Kalberer is that they all deleted e-mails from their own various individual 2 computers, whether desktop, laptop or handheld, because such e-mails would be saved on 3 the central Zurich server database.
4

5 30 The principal criticism made by the Gilbertson Parties is that the Renova Parties were in 6 serious breach of their discovery obligations in knowingly destroying all of the various 7 potential sources of data deriving from the crashed Zurich server, thereby rendering any 8 potential subsequent recovery by IT experts impossible. They emphasize that the Renova 9 Group, through its Chief Legal Officer, Mr. Cheremikin in Moscow and its Deputy Chief 10 Legal Officer, Mr. Kalberer, in Zurich, were specifically advised by their Cayman and/or 11 their London lawyers of the need to preserve relevant documents when this litigation was 12 first in contemplation in January 2007 and that the Renova Parties were further advised to 13 that effect again in October 2009. The evidence of Mr. Cheremikin is that the Renova 14 Group IT department were informed of the need to preserve relevant documents, 15 although, it is, the Gilbertson Parties say, obvious that this advice was either ignored or at 16 least not acted upon.

18 31 It was submitted on behalf of the Gilbertson Parties that in these circumstances there is a 19 resulting substantial risk that a fair trial is not possible. They contend that the Renova 20 Parties' lack of proper discovery, indeed lack of almost any discovery, of documents 21 relevant to the issues in the case means that there is a serious risk that there cannot be a 22 fair trial. Although they do not contend that the Renova Parties' failure to give full and 23 proper discovery is deliberate in the sense of being intended to pervert the course of

1 justice, they do contend that the Renova Parties have shown a reckless and culpable 2 disregard for their discovery obligations and in particular their obligations to preserve 3 relevant documents and the sources of such documents. They submit that although they 4 accept that striking out the Renova Parties' claim is not intended as a punishment for 5 such culpability, nonetheless, since as a consequence of their actions there is a serious 6 risk that a fair trial is not possible, the Plaintiff's claim and the Renova Parties' defence 7 to the counterclaim should be struck out.

8 9 32 The Renova Parties contend, first, that the Court does not have jurisdiction to strike out in 10 the present circumstances. They argue that GCR Order.24, r.20 is the sole source of the 11 Court's jurisdiction to strike out in respect of defective discovery and that therefore such 12 jurisdiction only arises when there has been a breach of an order for discovery, usually an 13 "unless" order. They argue that paragraph 3 of the 30 November Order is a mandatory 14 injunction order and not an order for discovery of which there has been any breach. They 15 dispute that the Court has any inherent jurisdiction over and above the specific 16 jurisdiction created by GCR O.24, r.20 which, they say codifies the Court's powers in 17 this respect.

20
21 33 The Renova Parties also submit that no duties or obligations in respect of discovery arise
22 until an order for discovery is made, in this case that being the 20 July Order. They say 23 that accordingly in this case the Renova Parties had no obligations with regard to

1 discovery until then and that therefore most of the steps taken by the Renova Group IT 2 department following the Zurich computer crash in January 2008 are simply not relevant.

3
4 34 It was also argued on behalf of the Renova Parties that the steps taken by the Renova
5 Group IT Department were anyway reasonable in the circumstances and entirely 6 understandable and not culpable. In any event, they submitted, there is no evidence 7 either that the e-mail database of the crashed Zurich server ever contained any e-mails or 8 other documents relevant to these proceedings or that any data would have in fact been 9 recoverable from the crashed Zurich server whether, from the back-up tapes, from the 10 Moscow server or from the logical drive, even if they had not been destroyed or 11 overwritten. They also point out that the affidavit evidence relied upon by the Renova 12 Parties is that the principal individuals concerned did not habitually use internal e-mail 13 anyway, whether to discuss issues such as those which are the subject of the proceeding 14 or otherwise and it was not their practice to make or keep notes, memoranda or drafts of 15 documents. This, they say, being the affidavit evidence, it is not, at least in the absence 16 of any cross examination, open to challenge for purposes of the Gilbertson Parties' strike 17 out application. In any event, it was submitted, the affidavits verifying the Further and 18 Better Lists of Documents are conclusive and the Court may not go behind them.

20 35 With regard to Mr. Vekselberg's TNK-BP and SUAL e-mail accounts, the Renova 21 Parties contend that Mr. Vekselberg has no legal right in Russia (in relation to his TNK-22 BP e-mail account) or in Jersey (in relation to his SUAL e-mail account) to demand 23 access to any historic e-mails sent to or from those e-mail addresses and that accordingly

1 such e-mails, if there were any, are not within his possession, custody or power and 2 therefore not discoverable.

3
4 36 Lastly, in this general summary of the parties contentions, the Renova Parties submit that 5 there is no basis in the present case for striking out their claim at this, an interlocutory 6 stage, but that any doubts with regard to discovery should be dealt with at the trial where 7 the Court will hear oral evidence and cross examination and may draw whatever 8 inferences it may consider justified in reaching its conclusion on the merits of the original 9 action and the counterclaim.

1 38 While I was referred to a number of English cases, to which I shall refer in due course, it
2 seems to me proper and appropriate that I should start with the two principal Cayman 3 Islands authorities to which I was referred and which, of course, although not binding on 4 me because they were both cases at first instance, are nonetheless more persuasive in this 5 Court.

7 39 Brown v Horvat Properties (Cayman Islands) Ltd et al [1992-93] CILR N5 (full 8 Transcript of Reasons dated 20 December 1993), (Smellie J, (as he then was)), was a case 9 in which there had been an “unless” order made against the defendants, who were the 10 defaulting parties, with regard to the defendants’ failure to give proper discovery.
11 Inevitably the circumstances were quite different from those in the instant case. However, 12 the learned judge, in considering the relevant principles said (page 13 of Transcript):

14 “The available case law dealing with the exercise of the Court’s power to 15 strike out advises that it is not a part of the function of the Court to punish 16 the party in default and cases of contumacious conduct in relation to

20 In the same judgment in which the foregoing observations were cited, 21 Lloyd LJ in Landauer Ltd v Comins and Co. The Times, 7 August 1991,
22 the English Court of Appeal (Civil Division), also made the following 23 observations:

24 25 “But I can imagine cases of contumacious conduct such as the 26 deliberate suppression of a document which might justify the 27 striking out on the analogy of striking out for want of prosecution
28 under Order 25, rule 1(4) even if a fair trial were still possible”.

In the Landauer case it was also confirmed, by the adoption of the test earlier propounded in Logricose Limited v Southend United Football Club Limited The Times, 5 March 1988 –

“that in the absence of contumacious default the test was whether there was a real or substantial or serious risk that a fair trial was no longer possible.

The second dimension related to the prospect of requiring the Plaintiff to proceed with the trial without complete discovery from the defendants.

While the Plaintiff’s case was patently strong, there was no measure for assessing the possible importance of material which was yet to be discovered. That recourse would therefore not have been an appropriate manner in which to direct the conduct of this somewhat complex litigation.

The decision to strike out might, also, properly contain an element of sanction for non-compliance with the order of a Court.

The following passage is taken from the decision of the English Court of Appeal in: Lonrho plc v Fayed and Others (No.3), the Times Law Reports, June 24, 1993 at p.349

“The commonest use of Order 24, rule 16 [the RSC equivalent of GCR O.24, r.20] was to enforce a party’s obligation to serve a list of documents, the Court would order the claim or defence to be struck out unless discovery was given by a certain time.

If there was a default in the “unless” order the claim or defence was struck out without more ado. It could also be

1 at least are being deliberately withheld, or have been deliberately 2 destroyed.

3
4 55. As in Landauer Ltd v Comins & Co., here the circumstances invite the 5 only reasonable inference that, where documents have been deliberately 6 suppressed, they must have been highly material to the issues in the 7 action. And also, as in that case, the unavoidable conclusion is that, in the 8 absence of those documents, justice cannot be done. When this ultimate 9 failure, on the part of the defendants, is taken with the history of proven 10 recalcitrance and prevarication on their part in this case, it is a failure 11 which can, in my view, be regarded only as an abuse of the process of the 12 Court. See Arrow Nominees Inc. v Blackledge [[2000] 2 BCLC 167], 13 where the English Court of Appeal stated ([2001] BCC 591, at paras.54-14 55):

16 “But where a litigant’s conduct puts the fairness of the trial in 17 jeopardy, where it is such that any judgment in favour of the 18 litigant would have to be regarded as unsafe, or where it amounts 19 to such an abuse of process of the Court as to render further 20 proceedings unsatisfactory and to prevent the Court from doing 21 justice, the Court is entitled – indeed, I would hold bound – to 22 refuse to allow that litigant to take further part in the proceedings 23 and (where appropriate) to determine the proceedings against him.
24 The reason, as it seems to me, is that it is no part of the Court’s 25 function to proceed to trial if to do so would give risk to a 26 substantial risk of injustice. The function of the Court is to do 27 justice between the parties; not to allow its process to be used as a 28 means of achieving injustice. A litigant who has demonstrated that 29 he has determined to pursue proceedings with the object of 30 preventing a fair trial has forfeited his right to take part in a trial.
31 His object is inimical to the process which he purports to invoke.

32
33 Further, in this context, a fair trial is a trial which is conducted 34 without undue expenditure of time and money; and with a proper 35 regard to demands of other litigants upon the finite resources of a 36 Court. The Court does not do justice to the other parties to the 37 proceedings in question if it allows its process to be abused so that 38 the real point in issue becomes subordinated to an investigation

2 the defendants altogether.....be regarded as having 3 failed to meet their general discovery obligations imposed by the Grand 4 Court Rules 1995, O.24, r.20 in this action.

6 In such circumstances, plaintiffs are not to be invariably required to show 7 that there is a real risk of prejudice to their case, before the sanction of 8 striking out can be imposed upon the defendants. That sanction is justified 9 by the deliberate and inexcusable nature of the breach itself.

11 63. For all these foregoing reasons, I conclude – and even with concerns as to 12 the need for proportionality of the just sanction in mind.....
13 that there is a real risk that the conduct of the defendants has rendered 14 further conduct of the proceedings unsatisfactory (a conclusion of 15 principle reached by Millett J, as he then was, based on similarly serious 16 concerns in Logicrose Ltd [supra]. The defendants have therefore in my 17 view, entirely forfeited their right to continue to defend, or to sue, in these 18 proceedings. I order that their defence and counterclaim be struck out”.

20 41 The three principal English authorities referred to by the Hon. Chief Justice in the two 21 Cayman Islands cases which I have quoted from above were Logicrose Ltd v Southend
22 United Football Club (The Times, 5 March 1988 – official transcript of 5 February 1988) 23 (“the Logicrose case”); Landauer Ltd v Comins & Co (English Court of Appeal – official 24 transcript dated 14 May 1991) (“the Landauer case”) and Arrow Nominees Inc. v 25 Blackledge [2000] 2 BCLC 167 (“the Arrow Nominees case”). I was also referred by 26 both Leading counsel at the hearing before me to Douglas v Hello! Ltd [2003] EWHC 55
27 (Ch) (“the Douglas v Hello! case”). Although Leading counsel referred me to other cases 28 both in their extensive written skeleton arguments and in their oral submissions, to some

1 of which I will refer later, these four English cases, although of course not binding on me, 2 are the English authorities which I found of most assistance.

4 42. The Logicrose case concerned an application by the defendants during the course of the 5 trial of the action and shortly before the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case for an order that 6 the action be dismissed and the defence to the counterclaim struck out pursuant to RSC 7 O.24, r.16 on the ground that the plaintiffs had failed to comply with the requirements for 8 discovery. The basis for the application was summarized by Millett J (as he then was) as 9 follows:

11 "It is alleged that Mr. Harriss, who is the principal Director and shareholder of 12 the plaintiffs (and has been their principal witness) has not merely failed to 13 disclose the existence of a crucial document in his possession or power, but that, 14 having obtained it during the course of the trial (and, indeed, during the course of 15 his cross examination), he deliberately suppressed it and, for a time, successfully 16 concealed its existence from the Court.

17
18 That is a very serious allegation indeed. If true it would deserve the serious 19 consequences for which the Defendants ask, but it must be clearly proved.
20 Despite Mr Nugee's submissions to the contrary on behalf of the Plaintiffs, I am 21 satisfied that it does not have to be proved in accordance with the criminal 22 standard of proof. Deliberate disobedience of (sic) a peremptory order for 23 discovery is no doubt a contempt and, if proved in accordance with the criminal 24 standard of proof, may, in theory at least, be visited with a fine or imprisonment.
25 But to debar the offender from all further part in the proceedings and to give 26 judgment against him accordingly is not an appropriate response by the Court to 27 contempt.

29 It may, however, be an appropriate response to a failure to comply with the rules 30 relating to discovery, even in the absence of a specific order of a Court, and so in 31 the absence of any contempt, not because that conduct is deserving of punishment 32 but because the failure has rendered it impossible to conduct a fair trial and 33 would make any judgment in favour of the offender unsafe.

34
35 In my view a litigant is not to be deprived of his right to a proper trial as a 36 penalty for his contempt or his defiance of the Court, but only if his conduct has

3 amounted to an abuse of the process of the Court which would render any further 4 proceedings unsatisfactory and prevent the Court from doing justice. Before the 5 Court takes that serious step, it needs to be satisfied that there is a real risk of this 6 happening.”

7 8 43. Having set out in detail the factual circumstances and counsel’s submissions concerning 9 the missing document, which had eventually been produced, Millet J. continued (Transcript p.7):

11 The object of Order 24 Rule 16 is not to punish the offender for his conduct but to 12 secure the fair trial of the action in accordance with the due process of the Court 13 (see Husband’s of Marchwood Ltd. v Drummond Walker Developments Ltd 14 [1975] 2 All ER 30, [1975] 1 WLR 603). The deliberate and successful 15 suppression of a material document is a serious abuse of the process of the Court 16 and may well merit the exclusion of the offender from all over participation in the 17 trial. The reason is that it makes the fair trial of the action impossible to achieve 18 and any judgment in favour of the offender unsafe.....

19 20 But I do not think that it would be 21 right to drive a litigant from the judgment seat without a determination of the 22 issue as a punishment for his conduct, however deplorable, unless there was a 23 real risk that that conduct would render the further conduct of proceedings 24 unsatisfactory. The Court must always guard itself against the temptation of 25 allowing its indignation to lead to a miscarriage of justice.”

26
27 44. The Landauer case was an appeal from an order of the judge below striking out the 28 plaintiff’s claim for failure to comply with its discovery obligations. The plaintiff 29 conceded that it was in breach of its discovery obligations in that a number of relevant 30 documents were not at first listed in its List of Documents and had since been destroyed.
31 In giving the judgment of the English Court of Appeal Lloyd LJ said that there was no 32 doubt that the judge had jurisdiction to make the order (striking out the plaintiff’s claim) 33 which he did, but that the question was whether he should have exercised his discretion to 34 strike out in that case. In the particular circumstances on which the plaintiff’s claim were 35 based, the Court of Appeal said that it was clear that the state of knowledge of the 36 plaintiff’s managing director (a Mr Axford) was going to be of critical importance to the 37 success of the plaintiff’s claim at trial. Some of the most relevant parts of this judgment

1 were quote in the Cayman Islands cases to which I have referred above and I shall not 2 repeat them but at page 3 of the Transcript Lloyd LJ explained:

4 “The writ was issued on 2 August 1986. On 11 September 1987 the plaintiffs 5 furnished their first list of documents. The list was defective, since a number of 6 relevant documents were omitted altogether. Some of these documents had 7 already been destroyed. Others were destroyed later. The destruction took place
8 in three phases. The first phase was as a result of a policy of destruction initiated 9 in October 1986, a few months after the writ was issued. Further destruction took 10 place in February 1989, when the plaintiffs moved their offices. The final phase 11 was in June 1990, when Mr Axford retired.
12

13 There is an issue between the parties as to the plaintiffs’ state of mind when 14 carrying out their policy of destruction. The defendants do not say that the 15 plaintiffs deliberately destroyed documents which they knew to be relevant to 16 these proceedings in order to prevent them coming to the eyes of the defendants.
17 But they do say, or any rate did say in the Court below, that the plaintiffs carried 18 out their policy of destruction in knowing disregard of their discovery obligations.
19 In other words, they destroyed these files without first checking the files to see 20 whether they contained any relevant documents. That applied particularly to 21 documents destroyed by Mr Axford in June 1990, despite advice which the
23

25
26 It was common ground that the question he [the Judge] had to ask himself was 27 whether there was a real or substantial or serious risk that a fair trial was no 28 longer possible. This was the test which had been adopted by Millett J. in [the 29 Logicrose case] and followed by Mummery J in Associated Newspapers Group 30 PLC v Insert Media Limited and others (unreported). In neither of those cases was the plaintiff’s claim struck out, since in both cases the documents in question

1 were eventually produced. So far as we have been told, this is the first occasion 2 on which a claim has been struck out for breach of a discovery obligation.

3
4 45. Having rejected two of the grounds of appeal which are not material for present purposes
5 the Court of Appeal went on to consider whether the appellants/ plaintiffs had established 6 that the judge was plainly wrong in striking out the plaintiff's claim. In this regard, the 7 Court considered first whether they could go behind the plaintiff's evidence, there having 8 been no application to cross-examine the plaintiffs' witnesses on their affidavits. The 9 Court of Appeal was persuaded that they could do so, principally because the plaintiff's 10 own evidence disclosed documents of the type which the Court would have expected to 11 be in Mr. Axford's destroyed files and which were the type of document, in the opinion 12 of the Court of Appeal, which could prove vital in cross-examination of the plaintiff's 13 witnesses on the "all important question of their knowledge". The Court of Appeal also 14 concluded that Mr. Axford's own affidavit evidence showed that documents relating to 15 the issues in the case would have been expected to be found on the destroyed files. Lloyd 16 LJ concluded (pp 12-13) as follows:

17 "In the light of those three considerations, the judge was, in my view, fully 18 entitled to find that there was a serious risk that essential documents may have 19 been destroyed in this case, as a result of which a fair trial of the action is no 20 longer possible, that being the test which he had been invited to apply. He was 21 therefore entitled to hold that the appropriate response was to strike out the 22 plaintiff's claim. At all events it cannot be said that the judge was plainly wrong 23 in doing so. In reaching that conclusion I assume in the plaintiff's favour that the 24 destruction of the documents was, as Mr Axford says, merely inadvertent. So on 25 that short ground I would dismiss the appeal.

26 27 There was, however, some discussion and argument before us as to what would 28 have been the position if the documents had been destroyed in knowing disregard 29 of the plaintiffs' obligation as to discovery. I find some difficulty in seeing how, if 30 the sole question is whether a fair trial can still be held, the conduct of the 31 plaintiffs in destroying the documents, whether it was merely inadvertent or

1 whether it was in knowing disregard of their obligation as to discovery and 2 therefore more blameworthy, can be fitted into the equation. But the question
3 does not arise in the present case. It will need careful consideration when it does

7 46. The Arrow Nominees case before the English Court of Appeal in 2000 concerned, in 8 brief summary, the question whether an unfair prejudice petition brought under the UK 9 Companies Act 1985 should be struck out on the ground that disclosure of forged 10 documents made a fair trial impossible. There were two applications by the respondents 11 to strike out the petition, the first prior to the hearing of the petition and the second during 12 the hearing of the petition. In the leading judgment Chadwick LJ (now President of the 13 Cayman Islands Court of Appeal) explained (page 182) the first application to strike out 14 as follows:

15 16 “30 The revelation that disclosed documents had been falsified led the 17 Blackledge respondents to apply to strike out the petition. The hearing of 18 that application before Evans-Lombe J extended over three days, 19 concluding on 25 October 1999. In the judgment which he handed down 20 on 2 November 1999, the judge referred to Nigel Tobias’ actions as 21 “conduct of the most profound dishonesty, involving what was obviously a 22 careful and deliberate strategy on his part to perpetrate a fraud on the 23 Court” But the judge was not satisfied that what 24 was presented to him as the past conduct of Nigel Tobias justified the 25 Draconian course which he was being invited to take; namely, to strike 26 out the petition.”

27
28 In addition to the comments already quoted, Chadwick LJ said: 29

30 54. for my part, I
31 would allow the appeal on a second, and additional ground. I adopt as a 32 general principal, the observations of Millett J in [the Logicrose case], 33 that the object of the rules as to discovery is to secure the fair trial of the

1 action in accordance with the due process of the court; and that,
2 accordingly, a party is not to be deprived of his right to a proper trial as a 3 penalty for disobedience of [sic] those rules, even if such disobedience 4 amounts to contempt for or defiance of the Court, if that object is 5 ultimately secured, by (for example) the late production of a document 6 which has been withheld.

10 56 In my view, having heard and disbelieved the evidence of Nigel Tobias as 11 to the extent of his fraudulent conduct, and having reach the conclusion
12 (as he did) that Nigel Tobias was persisting in his object of frustrating a 13 fair trial, the judge ought to have considered whether it was fair to the 14 respondents, and in the interests of the administration of justice generally, 15 to allow the trial to continue. If he had considered that question, then, as 16 it seems to me, he should have come to the conclusion that it must be 17 answered in the negative. A decision to stop the trial in those 18 circumstances is not based on the Courts desire (or any perceived need) to 19 punish the party concerned; rather, it is a proper and necessary response 20 where a party has shown that his object is not to have the fair trial which 21 it is the Courts function to conduct, but to have a trial the fairness of 22 which he has attempted (and continues to attempt) to compromise.

25 58 To suggest that the basis on which the Court acts, when deciding to strike 26 out a petition on the ground that there is a substantial risk that a fair trial 27 has become impossible as the result of a petitioner's conduct, is founded 28 upon the Courts determination that a petitioner of whose conduct it 29 disapproves should be denied discretionary relief is to misunderstand the 30 position in a fundamental respect.

..... I should not leave the matter without this comment. The judge's observation, in the final paragraph of his first judgment, that "if in the course of the trial further evidence emerges that other documents have been suppressed or fraudulently altered, the application to strike out can then be renewed and is highly likely to be successful" must be taken to have led, in some measure, to the trial thereafter taking the course that it did. It seems to me that it may well be more satisfactory, in a case where there has been admitted forgery or destruction of relevant documents, to decide, on the application to strike out, whether the full extent of the fraudulent conduct has been revealed, even if that requires oral evidence at that stage. The judge recognised that cross-examination could have been sought on the application in October 1999. It is, of course, a matter of case management for the judge in each case whether to invite cross-examination on an interlocutory application, or to leave the point until trial. But I venture to suggest that a judge faced with an application to strike out in circumstances such as those in the present case ought to address the question whether the better course would not be to resolve the issue, before the trial begins (or perhaps, as a preliminary issue at the start of the trial), whether full disclosure of the fraudulent conduct has been made. If, in the absence of cross-examination, the judge cannot resolve that issue at the interlocutory stage, then he is left in the position that he cannot be confident that there is no substantial risk that the trial (if it proceeds) will be a fair trial. Indeed, he can be reasonably confident that it would be unfair, in the sense that it will give rise to a detailed examination of issued which ought not, properly, to be occupying the time of the Court at the trial. If, on the other hand, he is able to resolve that issue before trial (after cross-examination if necessary), then it will not

1 require further investigation at the trial. If the judge is satisfied, in the 2 light of what he accepts is full disclosure, that there is no substantial risk 3 that the admitted forgery or destruction of documents will lead to a result 4 which is unsafe then he will allow the trial to proceed. But, if he is not 5 satisfied that there has been full and frank disclosure of the fraudulent 6 conduct, then, for the reason which I have already given, it seems to me 7 that the correct response is to refuse to allow the party in default from 8 taking any further part in the proceedings, with whatever consequences 9 follow from that.”

10
11 Ward LJ, although making some comments of his own, principally about the overriding 12 objective in the English CPR, expressly agreed with the judgment of Chadwick LJ as did 13 Roche LJ.

15 47. The Douglas v Hello! application was heard by the Hon Vice-Chancellor in the English 16 Chancery Division in January 2003. The plaintiffs applied for an order that the defences 17 of the Hello! defendants should be struck out and judgment entered against them for 18 damages to be assessed pursuant to the relevant rule of the CPR (rule 3.4(2)) or the 19 inherent jurisdiction of the Court. The grounds for the application were that the Hello!
20 defendants:

22 “1) made or caused to be made false statements to the Court of Appeal in November 23 2000 knowingly or without an honest belief in their truth and 24 2) deliberately destroyed or disposed of documents, and 25 3) Made false disclosure statements knowingly, or without an honest belief in their 26 truth and have thereby interfered with the course of justice by so doing and/or have 27 thereby put the fairness of the trial in jeopardy, and rendered any judgment that may

1 be entered in their favour unsafe and further proceedings unsatisfactory and 2 prevented the Court from doing justice.

3
4 It should be noted that the hearing of the application took place prior to the trial of the 5 merits of the action and also that there was cross-examination of four witnesses in the 6 course of the hearing. The plaintiffs substantive claim was for damages for breach of 7 confidentiality and privacy arising out of the proposed unauthorized publication of 8 photographs of their wedding. With regard to the question of alleged destruction of 9 documents by and the failure of the Hello! defendants to give proper disclosure the Vice 10 Chancellor said:

12 “35 That is by no means the end of the story relevant to the application before 13 me. I also have to consider the subsequent events both with regard to the 14 destruction of documents and the failure of the Hello! Defendants to give 15 proper disclosure. Neither is denied but the Hello! Defendants seek to 16 minimize the importance of what occurred. No criticism is made of 17 Charles Russell, the solicitors acting then or now for the Hello!
18 Defendants or any of them. Accordingly I assume that they complied with 19 their professional responsibility, as pointed out by Sir Robert Megarry V- 20 C in Rockwell Machine Tool Co Ltd v Barrus [1968] 2 AER 97, 98,

21
22 “to ensure that their clients appreciate at an early stage of the litigation, 23 promptly after writ issued, not only the duty of discovery and its width but 24 also the importance of not destroying documents which might by any

“86. Part B of the schedule to the application contains the details with regard to the allegations concerning the destruction or disposal of documents. As I have already recorded in paragraph 36 above the details are not in dispute. There is, however a distinction to be drawn between those which were destroyed or disposed of before these proceedings were commenced and those which were destroyed or disposed of thereafter. With regard to the former category it is established in the very recent decision in the Court of Appeal for the State of Victoria in British American Tobacco Australia Services Ltd v Cowell and McCabe [2002] VSCA 197 paras 173 and 175 that the criterion for the Court’s intervention of the type sought on this application is whether that destruction or disposal amounts to an attempt to pervert the course of justice. There being no English authority on this point I propose to apply that principal, not only because the decision of the Court of Appeal for the State of Victoria is persuasive authority but because I respectfully consider it to be right.

87. The documents which fall into this category are the e-mails passing between the personnel in the Hello! Defendants’ offices and others. The solicitor for the Hello! Defendants have stated that “as with many other e-mail systems, e-mails are deleted once read”. Plainly the deletion of such documents cannot justify the Court’s intervention. Nor insofar as any other type of document concerned is there any evidence to suggest that pre-action documents were destroyed in an attempt to pervert the course of justice.

88. Thus the material disposals or destructions are those made after the effective commencement of proceedings on 20 November 2000. These comprise..... Such destruction was plainly deliberate in the sense

1 photographs in digital format, have now been supplied by the other party
2 to the communication. What is not available are the originals or copies of 3 the documents destroyed which had been in the possession of the Hello!
4 Defendants. Such documents may or may not have had notes on them
5 made by the recipient or sender respectively. Equally there is not now 6 available any other document destroyed or disposed of. But what 7 evidence is there that there were any?

8 9 98. This is the conundrum. I have given anxious consideration to whether I 10 should, on a balance of probability, infer from the conduct of the Hello!
11 defendants to which I have referred that there were further material 12 undisclosed documents. I consider that I should.

13 14 99. But does that inference justify striking out the whole or any part of the 15 defence of the Hello! Defendants. As stated by Millett J in [the Logicrose 16 case]

18 “I do not think that it would be right to drive a litigant from the 19 judgment seat without a determination of the issues as a 20 punishment for his conduct, however, deplorable, unless there was 21 a real risk that that conduct would render the further conduct of 22 proceedings unsatisfactory. The Court must always guard itself 23 against the temptation of allowing its indignation to lead to a 24 miscarriage of justice.”

25
26 There can be no question, for example, of excusing the claimants from 27 proof of other parts of their case by striking out the whole of the defence 28 of the Hello! Defendants.

29

1 Having considered specific paragraphs of the claim and also referred to the ability of the 2 [trial] judge to draw inferences, the Vice-Chancellor said:
3

4 “104. Accordingly, notwithstanding conduct attributable to the Hello!
5 Defendants which leaves a very great deal to be desired with regard to the 6 veracity of their evidence and the adequacy of their disclosure I am not 7 persuaded that a fair trial is no longer possible or that the deficiencies in 8 the conduct of the defence of the Hello! Defendants justify an order 9 striking out the whole or any part of it”.
10

11 And accordingly the Vice-Chancellor inter alia made no order on the application of the 12 claimants for an order striking out the defences of the Hello! Defendants.

14 49 I will seek to draw conclusions on the various principles to be derived from these 15 authorities but before doing so I consider it appropriate that I should also refer to the well 16 known passage on the nature of discovery in The Compagnie Financiere et Commerciale 17 Du Pacifique v The Peruvian Guano Company (1882) 11 QBD 55 (“the Peruvian Guano 18 case”) which was cited to me. In that case Baggallay LJ said (at page 59):
19

20 “I assent to the suggestion made by Brett LJ in the course of the argument, that a 21 document which, it is not unreasonable to suppose, may tend to either advance the 22 case of the party seeking discovery, or to damage the case of his adversary, should be 23 regarded as a document relating to a matter in question in the action.”
24

25 And Brett LJ said (at page 62):
26

27 “The party swearing the affidavit is bound to set out all documents in his possession 28 or under his control relating to any matters in question in the action. Then comes

1 this difficulty: what is the meaning of that definition? What are the documents which 2 are documents relating to any matter in question in the action? In Jones v Monte 3 Video Gas Co [5 QBD 556] the Court stated its desire to make the rule as to the 4 affidavit of documents as elastic as was possible. And I think that that is the view of 5 the Court both as to the sources from which the information can be derived and as to 6 the nature of the documents. We desire to make the rule as large as we can with due 7 regard to propriety; and therefore I desire to give as large an interpretation as I can 8 to the words of the rule, “a document relating to any matter in question in the 9 action.”

10 11 The doctrine seems to me to go further than that and to go as far as the principle 12 which I am about to lay down. It seems to me that every document relates to the 13 matters in question in the action, which not only would be evidence upon any issue, 14 but also which it is reasonable to suppose contains information which may – not 15 which must – either directly or indirectly enable the party requiring the affidavit
16 either to advance his own case or to damage the case of his adversary. I have put it 17 in the words, “either directly or indirectly” because, as it seems to me, a document 18 can properly be said to contain information which may enable the party requiring the 19 affidavit either to advance his own case or to damage the case of his adversary, if it is 20 a document which may fairly lead him to a train of enquiry, which may have either of

24 50 Clearly, none of the judgments from which I have recited extracts above were based on 25 factual circumstances which are the same as those in the present case (although perhaps 26 the circumstances in the Douglas v Hello! case are closest to the present situation), and a 27 Judge’s exercise of discretion in determining whether or not to strike out a party’s claim 28 or defence will, of course inevitably depend upon the particular circumstances. However, 29 it has been clearly accepted in this jurisdiction, following the English authorities, that

1 firstly, in circumstances where a party has failed to meet its discovery obligations it is not 2 the function of the Court to punish the party in default by striking out that party's claim 3 or defence, but that the issue for the Court is whether the consequence of such default is 4 that there is a real or substantial risk that a fair trial of the action is no longer possible.
5 The issue is whether the defaulting party's conduct has put the fairness of the trial in 6 jeopardy such that there is a serious risk that any judgment in favour of that party would 7 have to be considered unsafe. As Millett J said as approved by the Vice-Chancellor, the 8 Court does not strike out the claim or defence because it disapproves of the party's 9 conduct but because the Court is satisfied that the party's conduct has resulted in a 10 substantial risk to the fairness of a trial. It is also clear that the proportionality of the 11 sanction of striking out in the particular circumstances must be taken into consideration 12 and that it is not right to drive a litigant from the judgment seat as a punishment for his 13 conduct, however deplorable, unless there is a consequent real risk that further conduct of 14 the proceedings would be unsatisfactory and the fairness of a trial seriously questionable.
15 Furthermore, in considering the destruction of relevant documents a distinction is to be 16 drawn between such destruction prior to the commencement of the relevant proceedings 17 and such destruction after the commencement of the relevant proceedings. As far as 18 destruction prior to the commencement of the relevant proceedings is concerned the 19 justification for the involvement of the Court is whether such destruction amounted to an 20 attempt to pervert the course of justice. Lastly, the question whether or not there should 21 be cross-examination on the affidavits filed in such a strike out application is, in practice, 22 a question of case management and will depend on the precise circumstances.

1 51 It seems to me that in light of these general principles, at the end of the day the principal 2 questions which I must answer in this particular case are whether the Renova Parties have 3 failed to comply with their discovery obligations and, if so, whether the consequence of 4 that is that there is a substantial risk that a fair trial of the merits of the case is not 5 possible. That is, of course, a considerable generalization of the issues arising but is 6 nonetheless ultimately what, in my view, requires to be determined.

7 8 Comments and Conclusions

9 52 Having heard the submissions of Leading counsel for the parties and reading again the 10 affidavit evidence submitted by or on behalf of the Renova Parties in opposition to the 11 application, my initial view expressed in my Ex Tempore Ruling of 30 November that 12 seemed to me that there was an obvious lack of discovery by the Renova Parties has not 13 substantially changed. In my view their own evidence shows there has been a serious 14 disregard by the Renova Parties of their need to preserve documents arising from their 15 obligation to give discovery in these proceedings. This is exemplified by the fact that 16 Mr. Mamaev, a member of the Renova Group IT staff, who reported directly to Mr.
17 Grosset, the Head of the Renova Group IT department, and who regularly travelled from 18 Moscow to Zurich to deal with IT matters there, was not made aware, until sometime in 19 the second week of December 2010, even of the existence of these proceedings and, even 20 then, he was given no details of the 30 November Order or its implications. If he had no 21 knowledge until then of these proceedings it is reasonable to assume he had no 22 knowledge of the need to ensure or even apply his mind to the preservation of data 23 potentially relevant to the issues in dispute in these proceedings at least from May 2008.

1 My overall impression of the evidence filed by the Renova Parties in response to the 2 Gilbertson Parties strike out application is that notwithstanding the legal advice 3 concerning discovery given to them in January 2007 and again in October 2009, (which 4 itself seems to me to have been surprisingly late in the day), there was a complete 5 disregard by the Renova Group of the need to preserve all relevant documents, including 6 the potential sources of such documents for discovery purposes. The Zurich server crash 7 shortly before these proceedings were commenced was obviously unfortunate. However 8 the steps taken thereafter to destroy over time all the possible alternative sources of e-9 mail or other electronic data, some of which may well have been relevant to these 10 proceedings, to my mind amounts to a complete lack of consideration for and disregard 11 of the need to preserve all potential sources of relevant documents. It is no answer for the 12 Renova Parties to say that the proposed investment in the Rights was but a very small 13 part of the Renova Groups business nor, in my view, is it good enough simply to say that 14 the Renova Group's own IT department were themselves unable to access data from 15 these alternative sources as a justification for their destruction in light of their discovery 16 obligations. The evidence of the IT experts is that if such alternative sources had not 17 been destroyed it probably would have been possible to reconstitute and access data from 18 those sources yet the Renova Group did not consult any such expert until effectively 19 compelled to do so by the indications given by the Court at the hearing which led to the 20 Ex Tempore Ruling and the 30 November Order.

1 53 As I have already summarized it was argued strenuously on behalf of the Renova Group 2 that no obligation to preserve documents which are relevant or potentially relevant to the 3 proceedings arises until an order for discovery is made. I do not accept that submission
4 and in my view it is not supported by the authorities which were cited to me. The crucial 5 distinction is the position prior to the commencement of proceedings and the position 6 after the proceedings have commenced. The approach adopted in England (see the 7 Douglas v Hello! case adopting the approach of the Australian British America Tobacco 8 case, to which I have referred above) is that the relevant question in the case of 9 destruction or disposal of documents before proceedings are commenced is whether that 10 amounted to an attempt to pervert the course of justice. However, the issue for the 11 Court's determination in respect of destruction or disposal of relevant documents after 12 proceedings have commenced is whether such destruction or disposal has caused a 13 substantial risk that a fair trial is no longer possible.

14
15 54 There is no evidence in this case, and Leading counsel for the Gilbertson Parties did not 16 submit, that the steps taken by the Renova Group in destroying all the potential sources of 17 relevant documents, although clearly deliberate, amounted to an attempt to pervert the 18 course of justice. Accordingly, on the authority of the British American Tobacco case, 19 which I can see no good reason for not accepting as representing the law of the Cayman 20 Islands also, it would appear that any destruction of documents prior to the 21 commencement of these proceedings in May 2008 would not itself justify the Courts' 22 intervention of the nature applied for by the Gilbertson Parties. However, I consider that 23 it can legitimately be said that the issue in this case is rather broader than that because,

1 firstly, the Renova Parties, through their Chief Legal Officer and their Deputy Chief 2 Legal Officer were advised in January 2007, when these proceedings were clearly in 3 contemplation, of the need to preserve relevant documents and, secondly, because the 4 deliberate destruction of all the potential sources of relevant documents by the Renova 5 Parties which took place subsequent to the computer crash and subsequent, or 6 substantially subsequent, to the commencement of these proceedings, was carried out in 7 the light of the legal advice given in January 2007. I have therefore concluded that this 8 is a case in which the deliberate destruction of all potential sources of relevant 9 documents, established on the affidavit evidence of the Renova Parties, is prima facie 10 blameworthy and culpable. However, before turning to whether or not the consequence 11 of that is to create a serious risk that a fair trial is not possible, I should first deal with 12 several of the other issues which were the subject of argument, as I have already 13 generally summarised.

15 55 The Gilbertson Parties' strike out application is grounded firstly on GCR O.24,r.20 and, 16 in the alternative, on the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. It was argued on behalf of the 17 Renova Parties that GCR O.24, r.20 is not applicable in the circumstances of this case 18 because, it was contended, the Court has not made an order for discovery against the 19 Renova Parties with which they have failed to comply. They also argue that the Court 20 has no inherent jurisdiction because GCR O.24, r.20 codifies the circumstances in which 21 the Court may strike out a party's action on the ground of that party's failure to comply 22 with its discovery obligations and limits such obligations to compliance with a Court 23 order for discovery. In this regard some reliance was placed upon the fact that GCR

1 O.24, r.20 is slightly narrower in ambit than the equivalent Supreme Court Rule in 2 England (RSC O. 24, r.16), which refers to failure to comply with any requirement of the 3 rules as well as of any order made thereunder, whereas Order 24, r.20 of the GCR only 4 refers to failure to comply with an order for discovery and does not refer to non-5 compliance with the rules. Leading counsel for the Renova Parties contended that 6 paragraph 3 of the 30 November Order, requiring preservation of documents and of all 7 relevant IT equipment, was not an order for discovery in the sense referred to in GCR 8 O.24, r.20 even if, which was not admitted, there was a breach of that paragraph of the 9 Order by virtue of the destruction of the logical drive of the failed Zurich server as 10 referred to above subsequent to the Order.

11 12 56 I would be very loathe to accept that in circumstances such as these, the Court was 13 powerless to regulate its own process in respect of discovery, in order to be able to ensure 14 a fair trial and justice generally, if not inconsistent and in keeping with the rules. In my 15 view the provisions of GCR O.24, r.20 are capable of being interpreted widely enough to 16 include an order for the preservation of documents and of the IT sources of documents so 17 as to enable proper discovery. Such a preservation order is clearly not an order made 18 pursuant to or governed by GCR O.29, which relates to the preservation of the subject 19 matter of a cause or matter. The documents, or potential documents, in issue here are 20 documents which are or maybe discoverable as relevant to the issues in the case. They 21 are not the subject matter of the proceedings as the documents were, for example, in the 22 TMSF case. In my opinion paragraph 3 of the 30 November Order was clearly an 23 ancillary part of the discovery process and was properly made in light of the Renova

1 Group's obligations arising at least since commencement of the proceedings to preserve 2 and not to destroy potentially discoverable documents or the sources thereof as part of the 3 requirements of their discovery. Clearly those obligations were recognized by the 4 Renova Group's own Cayman Islands attorneys and London solicitors in advising them 5 of the need to preserve relevant documents in January 2007 and again in October 2009.
6 In light of the terms of the original 20 July Order and of the 30 November Order I 7 consider that the Gilbertson Parties' application may be considered to fall within the 8 terms of GCR O.24, r.20. Furthermore, and in the alternative, I am anyway of the 9 opinion, as I have already suggested, that this Court does have an inherent jurisdiction to 10 ensure fair and proper practice as between the parties as far as discovery is concerned, 11 with a view to achieving a fair trial and a just outcome to the disputes between them.
12 Discovery is a fundamental part of our trial process and, as I said in the Ex Tempore 13 Ruling, it is essential in order for justice to be done and seen to be done by a fair and just 14 trial of the issues. The test for relevance to the issues is extremely broad (see the 15 Peruvian Guano case). I have also already said on previous occasions in these 16 proceedings that I consider that this is a case which, if the parties cannot resolve their 17 differences by some other means, should go to trial and the parties respective claims 18 determined after full discovery and oral evidence with cross examination in the usual way 19 (see for example Ruling (3) dated 5th May 2010 at page 21). An inherent jurisdiction in 20 the Court to control its own process in this respect and to prevent the destruction of 21 documents or the likely sources of documents which are or maybe relevant to the issues 22 does not, in my view, in such circumstances, contravene the principle established by the 23 Court of Appeal in HSH Cayman 1 GP Limited et al v ABN Amro Bank NV (1) [2010]

1 (1) CILR 114. An inherent jurisdiction of the Court to intervene in circumstances where 2 there is prima facie a culpable failure to observe the fundamentals of proper discovery, 3 quite apart from the provisions of GCR O.24, r.20, is not inconsistent with that or the 4 other relevant rules. Indeed, the unchallenged order made at paragraph 3 of the 30
5 November Order, for the preservation of potentially relevant documents and the IT 6 equipment on which potential relevant data is likely to be stored is, it seems to me, itself
7 an exercise of such inherent jurisdiction. In this regard, I note also that in the Douglas v 8 Hello! case the Learned Vice-Chancellor stated, without any adverse comment, that the 9 strike out application in that case was also founded, in the alternative, upon the inherent 10 jurisdiction of the Court. I do not accept the submissions made on behalf of the Renova 11 Parties to the effect that this Court does not have jurisdiction in the circumstances of this 12 case to strike out the Plaintiff's claim and the defence to the counterclaim should it 13 consider it appropriate, in the interests of justice and, in the exercise of its discretion, to 14 do so.

16 57 Leading counsel for the Renova Parties also submitted that a party should not be 17 permitted to go behind the other party's discovery affidavit. Although no application was 18 made by the Gilbertson Parties for cross-examination of the Renova Parties' deponents 19 on their affidavits, Leading counsel for the Renova Parties argued also that no such cross-20 examination should anyway be permitted, at least at an interlocutory stage such as this. It 21 was contended on behalf of the Gilbertson Parties that, although they did not consider it 22 necessary, it was open to the Court to order such cross-examination if the Court felt 23 unable or unwilling to determine their strike out application on the basis of affidavit

1 evidence without cross-examination. I accept that in appropriate circumstances the Court
2 could direct cross-examination if it considered it necessary and appropriate, although I 3 also accept that such a requirement would, on an interlocutory application such as this, be 4 very unusual. In light of the final conclusion which I have reached, as explained below, I 5 have not thought it necessary to consider the question of cross-examination any further.
6

7 58 As far as the question of going behind a discovery affidavit is concerned, reference was 8 made to the judgment of Stuart-Smith LJ in the unreported English case of Fayed v
9 Lonrho plc (No. 3) (CA 14th June 1993). However, in the present case the Renova Parties 10 have not only filed affidavits verifying their Further and Better Lists of Documents 11 pursuant to the 30 November Order (or, in the case of the individual Renova Parties, the 7 12 April Order) but they have filed a significant number of affidavits, not only by the 13 individual Renova Parties themselves but also by other relevant individuals within the 14 Renova Group, such as Mr. Cheremikin, Mr. Kalberer, Mr. Grosset and Mr. Mamaev, as 15 well as reports by their independent IT experts, directly in response to the Gilbertson 16 Parties' strike out application. In my view, whatever the principle may be in relation to 17 going behind an affidavit filed solely for the purpose of verifying a list of documents, 18 there is no such principle in relation to affidavits of the nature and for the purpose 19 submitted by the Renova Parties in opposition to the present strike out application.
20

21 59 Even if I am justified in my conclusion, on the basis of the affidavit evidence submitted 22 by or on behalf of the Renova Parties, that there was deliberate destruction of potential 23 sources of relevant e-mails, and that prima facie such destruction was in the 1 circumstances blameworthy, it is well established that any consequent intervention by the 2 Court should not be in the nature of punishment of the offending party. The issue for 3 determination by the Court in such circumstances is whether as a consequence of the 4 offending party's culpable failure to comply with his discovery obligations there is a 5 substantial risk that a fair trial is no longer possible. As Sir Andrew Morritt VC re-6 iterated in the Douglas v Hello! case, citing Millett J in the Logicrose case: the Court 7 must always guard itself against the temptation of allowing its indignation to lead to a 8 miscarriage of justice. Millett J said earlier in the Logicrose case in a passage adopted 9 as correct by the Court of Appeal in the Arrow Nominees Inc case a litigant is not to be 10 deprived of his right to a fair trial because of failures in his discovery obligations – even 11 where that was deliberate and amounted to a contempt of Court – unless his conduct 12 rendered (or there is a real risk that it rendered) a fair trial impossible.

13
14 60 As I have already indicated, this is not a case like the TMSF case, where the potential 15 documents lacking from the Renova Group's discovery, of which any possible recovery 16 has been destroyed by them, are fundamental to the resolution of the issues in dispute. In 17 the present case, any such documents, if they had been recovered and discovered, would 18 no doubt have been a helpful source of cross-examination of the Renova Parties' 19 witnesses but they would not have been fundamental to the resolution of the parties' 20 respective cases. The parties, of course, as I have said, anyway dispute the extent to 21 which the whole history of relations between them as put forward by the Gilbertson 22 Parties is necessary for and relevant to the Court's final determination of the essential 23 issues in the case in any event. However, even if the Gilbertson Parties' more extensive

1 approach to the issue to be determined is adopted, I find it difficult to see how internal 2 communications between the Renova Parties themselves and between them and other 3 individuals in the Renova Group could be determinative of those issues. It seems to me 4 that the resolution of most, if not all, of the issues in dispute will largely turn upon the 5 consequences of largely undisputed factual actions and the legal analysis of those actions.
6 There is little, if any, dispute about what actually happened and what the parties did or 7 did not do, in respect of which it seems that the relevant inter partes correspondence and 8 other relevant documents are all available. What the parties said internally as between 9 themselves is, in this case, in my judgment, of secondary importance and in some 10 instances not relevant or even possibly not even admissible anyway.

12 61 It should not be overlooked in this context that a trial of these proceedings will involve 13 witness statements, oral evidence and cross-examination in respect of which the Court 14 may draw such inferences as it considers the whole evidence and the circumstances 15 justify in reaching its final conclusions. The absence of discoverable documentation may 16 possibly make cross-examination of the Renova Parties' witnesses more difficult for the 17 Gilbertson Parties but I am not satisfied that it would not prejudice them to the extent that 18 a fair trial would not be possible or that there would be a substantial risk that a fair trial 19 would not be possible. It was submitted on behalf of the Renova Parties that there is no 20 evidence that there was in fact any relevant e-mail or other data on the crashed Zurich 21 sever (and a fortiori, on the encrypted and unencrypted back-up tapes, the 22 decommissioned Moscow server or the deleted logical drive). Having regard to what, in 23 my view, are the more likely probabilities in the overall circumstances, namely that on a

1 balance of probabilities there would have been relevant e-mails on the Zurich server, it 2 does seem to me nevertheless equally improbable that any such e-mail data, even if it was 3 made available, would be determinative of the issues between the parties or that the 4 absence thereof would lead to a miscarriage of justice.

5
6 62 To strike out a party's action or defence at an interlocutory stage is clearly a very strong 7 step. It obviously deprives the party concerned of the opportunity to present and argue 8 his claim or defence on the merits for what are, after all, procedural reasons. That should 9 only be done, in my view, where the risk of injustice to the other party in proceeding with 10 the trial without such discovery is serious and substantial and clearly outweighs the 11 obvious injustice to the defaulting party concerned in having his claim or defence struck 12 out without consideration of its merits. Such a significant and prejudicial step must 13 clearly also be proportional to the seriousness of the default of the offending party and 14 the seriousness of its consequences. Although in this case the Renova Parties do not 15 dispute that they deliberately destroyed all potential sources of internal communications 16 and other records (although they seek to justify that) and I consider, at least on a prima 17 facie basis, such actions to have been blameworthy and culpable, there is no application 18 for a finding of contempt of Court or of abuse of process. Notwithstanding my serious 19 concerns about the Renova Parties' conduct with regard to discovery and, in particular 20 their destruction of all potential sources of discoverable documentation, I am not 21 persuaded that a fair trial of these proceedings is no longer possible or that there is a 22 substantial risk that that is so. Accordingly, I do not consider on balance that this is a case

1 which warrants the striking out of the Plaintiff's action or the Renova Parties' defence to 2 the counterclaim. I therefore refuse the Gilbertson Parties' application.

4 Costs

5 63 Although I have refused the Gilbertson Parties' application, it seems to me that the 6 inappropriate conduct of the Renova Parties is responsible for the legitimate concerns, 7 which I share, about their discovery. Accordingly, in the somewhat unusual 8 circumstances here, I would, subject to my comment below, order that the costs of and 9 incidental to this application should be costs in the cause. However, I am conscious that I 10 have not heard any argument on costs and therefore, if counsel for the parties do not 11 accept that this is an appropriate order in the circumstances, I will hear submissions on 12 costs at a later date.
